LONG LIVE HOMOEOPATHY AND HOMOEOPATHS

The Hahnemannian Gleanings on this auspicious day of stepping into its forty-fourth year, while felicitating its co-workers, friends, associates and readers, hails the ushering rays of renaissance of Hahnemannian Principles emanating from different disciplines of science from various parts of the world including our own country in the form of cybernetics, Kirlian photography etc.

How far that renaissance of Homoeopathy will involve our country or make it one of its gallant and invulnerable citadels will depend primarily on the homoeopathic profession itself led by its national organisation, The Homoeopathic Medical Association of India; and that means, in the final analysis, on the virility, valour and dynamicity with vigilance and prudence of this national professional organisation. Luckily enough, this organisation has survived with remarkable credit its neonatal emergencies and hazards and is at present passing through its pediatric phase with highly promising and rapid growth and development to its fully efficient and vigorous adult stage, which can be assuredly expected to discharge its responsibilities effectively and valiantly, avoiding any form of compromise with any kind of detrimental opportunism in the social, political, cultural, scientific, professional or organisational field. This is an indispensable necessity not so much for the interest of the organisation itself, but for the interest of the oncoming upsurge of Hahnemannian Homoeopathy. And this upsurge of Hahnemannian Homoeopathy is coming not at all to save itself per se, but as an ecological necessity to save the human race from the devastation, threatened by the overwhelming glamour of the modern developments of mechanical materialism.
