

Providence had its say when it thwarted him in his ambition to become a Surgeon and eventually Homœopathy gained a stalwart in his person.

He established the Homœopathic Post Graduate Association, Bombay in 1931 and remained the President of the same till the last day of his life.

He was one of the members of the Homœopathic Enquiry Committee appointed by the Government of India in 1948. He continued to be in the Advisory Committee subsequently until his staunch advocacy of a definite programme for the establishment of proper training institutions all over the country proved inconvenient to those in power.

With him Homœopathy in India has lost a great genius and an honest combatant.

May his soul rest in Eternal Peace!

WHITHER TO GO

we retrogress to join them? Should we break our crockery to match theirs?

I repeat, it is a hard task to practise homœopathy in all its purity. It is not enough if the law has appealed to our intelligence. We have to live up to it. The law will not stand any alteration under any pretext; for the law is not a human invention. It is man's observation of the Nature or Its law. In the words of Bacon we have to master Nature by obeying her.
