

AN ASTOUNDING CURE

DR. K. C. PAL, B.A., FATEHGARH, U.P.

Instances are numerous in which patients are saved from surgeon's knife with appropriate Homœopathic drugs.

Here is a recent case which has astounded many reputed doctors here.

Smt. Bith Bai aged 52 was suffering from abdominal pains and continuous fever, and was admitted in Government Hospital at Gwalior. She was X'rayed there on the 29.6.63. It revealed a big lump of fleshy substance on the right upper part of the abdomen. The hospital authorities decided to open the abdomen for a major operation and fixed a date. The husband of the patient thereupon sent a wire to her sister, Mrs. Ganga Devi Parihar who is a school mistress in Government Girls Higher Secondary School at Fatehgarh. She arrived there immediately after, and wanted to try Homœopathic treatment. After long arguments with hospital authorities there, she succeeded in deferring the date of operation for a fortnight and taking her home.

With great difficulty she was carried to Fatehgarh and reported to me on the 7.7.63.

Her temperature was 99.6 with intermittent sticking pain in hepatic region. She has obstinate constipation, no appetite and was extremely weak. I administered Conium. M. 200 with a few doses of palliative biochemic salts, and advised to report on the 4th day. To my great disappointment there was no significant improvement on the 4th day. I kept her waiting beside me and was watching her mental symptoms during my leisure hours. I noticed the following:

Mental and nervous weakness, forgetfulness of words and syllables and confusion of ideas, sadness with weeping etc. The lump shown in the X-ray plate may be a scirrhus induration. These and other minor factors led me to administer Lyco. 200 on the 12th July. On the 4th day, her temperature was normal and she felt much relief in all complaints. The dose was repeated. On the 20th I examined her again but could find only slight trace of the induration. I gave a few blank doses and examined her again on 27th, but there was very little improvement. I gave another dose of the same medicine. I examined her again on 29th July very carefully, and lo and behold, there was no trace of the induration!

To make assurance doubly sure I sent her to a local distinguished allopath doctor (Dr. S. B. Saxena, M.B.B.S., D.C., Eye specialist), In-charge of the local Sitapur Eye Hospital, with the X-ray plate. He examined the X-ray plate, examined the patient thoroughly, could not find any trace, became incredulous, and took her personally to the Civil Surgeon of the local General Hospital. The Civil Surgeon examined her personally and still there was no trace. She was at once put under X-ray screening and declared her absolutely free from the growth.

Thanks to Homœopathy, the patient is absolutely fit now.
